Chapter 2 by The Author

Sigh I once killed an innocent slug by pouring salt on it...
WHAT KIND OF MONSTER AM I????!!!

Chapter 3 by -

Oh, how can I utter it! I was once given the opportunity to reawaken the Force. To be a Jedi. But, how could I ever live up to such responsibility? I had to refuse! At least at the time it seemed the right thing to do. But now, I'm not so sure... Oh world, forgive me!

Okay, buckle up because this one's a doozy

So, a few years ago I got a Kik account and I put it on my phone. With a pretty much empty iPod and a full phone, I put my kik account on my phone, but still kept the app on my iPod. A few weeks after I got my phone, I was procrastinating one afternoon and going through the stuff still left on my iPod and I tried to get onto my kik account. Because it had been logged into on another device, I couldn't, so instead, being the strange person I am, I decided to make a new account pretending to be someone else. Not a real person, but my own character. I named her Rose, and gave her a back story and stuff, then "introduced" her to my friends.

Back then, me and my friends were really avid online roleplayers, and would roleplay with each other pretty much every afternoon, which is probably what caused me to create Rose. Anyway, I got Rose to 'meet' a few of my friends, and they really hit it off, other than one of them that didn't trust internet friends (for a good reason as this shows). Rose started roleplaying with us in the afternoon, and slowly, her character developed. I gave her a goldfish and two little brothers, and a whole heap of other backstory. I even created a wattpad account for her.

But as she developed it got more tiresome to be her, especially in conversations when I was involved as well. I would have to switch between my phone and iPod quickly so my friends didn't get suspicious. This started getting annoying, but I didn't want to tell my friends I'd lied because Rose had become so developed and they trusted me. So I would make Rose 'go on holidays' a lot and say she was going to whatnot places (which I'd been to and knew a bit about so I wasn't entirely clueless) just so I could take a break from the character.

To my luck, I never slipped up. My friends never realised what was really going on, and the guilt got heavier.

I still didn't want to tell them though. So, instead, Rose faded away, as internet friends do, and I never told my friends who she really was.

Me.

I suppose Rose's story kind of has a few morals, in a way. You should be honest, for one thing. But in another way, it proves the message we've been told by countless adults:

you never know who you're talking to online.

Now, I'm not saying that everyone on the internet are pedophiles or anything (goodness knows there are a few), but it is true that unless you know them you don't really know them.

That's all I have to say. There's my confession.

Chapter 5 by -

Unfortunately, it seems like the last thing we do in tough situations, is turn to God for help. This is something I try to work on. My mom says that Rule 1 in every facet of life is: Seek God First.

It is a humbling thing to realize that humans don't have all the answers... But He does!

Chapter 6 by -

Oh! I thought of a confession... I can't come with any more! Yes, that was it.

Don't know about you, but confessing to not confess is like confessing to confess a confession that was confessed in another confessing story of confessions not to be confessed!?!?

Chapter 7 by -

A confession - oh dear...

Kat is a really weird and crazy person. He doesn't know who he is dealing with when he starts godmodding my character.

If he doesn't want to talk to me, then leave me alone. If you are going to be unsociable, then leave me alone.

Just because you are at the top, does not make you a great person. In many ways, it has only done you harm.

Anyway, no offence, but I can't make any true assessments about you because I don't know anything about you because you won't talk to anyone and even if you did no one would care anymore.
